

Call of papers

The African Scientific Journal (ASJ) is an international scientific journal which aims to publish in electronic form scientific papers related to economics and management with innovative epistemological and methodological approaches. The journal focuses on themes developed in African countries and draws on little explored empirical contexts. Publication projects are subject to two stages of evaluation: A first stage consists of a rapid pre-evaluation by the editorial committee which decides on compliance with the broad lines of the journal's editorial policy. A second step consists of a double-blind evaluation by two members of our reading committee. Papers should be submitted to editors on the journal website.

We ask authors who wish to submit an article to ASJ to follow the author guidelines and the models that can be downloaded from the website.

Any article submitted entails automatically the author agreement so that his text can be proposed in its two versions (paper and electronic).
